It's mainly meant to be a personal case for Switchblade that you can use with your own Switchblade display.*

I've been tinkering with my Switchblade over the last few years and even got it working with the microSD card feature, but it got stuck back in 2010. Later on I hacked a copy of the firmware away from my own Switchblade and got it running again. Recently there's been some interest for the board and

The reviewer of this game gave it 9.3 out of 10. "Finally! A game that I'm not at all concerned about my character dying. It is simple and intuitive and actually quite easy. The game boasts a much richer fantasy world than any other MMORPG I know." Home land video recording devices (HVRS) are portable devices intended to gather, preserve and/or distribute home security related information. HVRS are known in the art and form the subject matter of U.S. Pat. No. 6,742,013 and pending continuation U.S. Ser. No. 10/985,970, both of which are hereby incorporated by reference. Generally, HVRS are known as stand-alone systems. HVRS record events that occur in a monitored home. Such events may include baby or elderly care, fire and smoke alarms, burglar and/or child security, medical, and emergency codes. To monitor the home a user typically programs a centralized or wireless controller device (WCD) and the HVRS into the programming routines of the WCD. The home is then monitored and information related to monitored events is distributed to the user, other responsible entities, law enforcement and emergency responders. Currently, HVRS provide predefined alerts for monitored events. For example, an HVRS may be programmed to produce an alert when a baby's or elderly care security system is activated. Typically, an additional alert is produced when a user has not authorized the alert. An example of nonauthorized alert would be when the user is not readily located for the event. When the user is located the alert is often not properly handled by the user or the municipality in which the user resides. In other words, typically the HVRS will sound an alert and the user often closes the program on the WCD thereby ignoring or muting the alert and also failing to record the event. Often when the WCD is remotely located an individual, incapable of "live" monitoring, is required to travel to the system location and either manually mute or properly handle the alert. Either situation is undesirable and in many cases creates delays that can result in further tragedies. U.S. Pat. No. 6,742,013 discloses an improved home alarm and monitoring system in which location locating data is combined with visual and/or audible alerts produced by a HVRS. As such, the HVRS produces a warning when a
