On October 6, La'Vonn and his mother, Amanda Shakespeare, were watching his younger brother when they received an alert about a wild Pokemon to be found on their front porch. Understandably, the boy and his mother were excited, and they immediately began to play the game. Officers responded after knocking on the door. They claim that La'Vonn and his mother were arrested for disobeying an officer after they refused to leave their home and instead began playing the game on the front lawn. The charges were later dismissed. "The phone stopped ringing and I just wanted to play this game with my mother and my brother," La'Vonn told The Washington Post. "But, it was the police who stopped us." After the arrest, members of a local neighborhood watch group, the Mt. Jackson Civic Association, began pressuring the state police. The association issued a press release denouncing the arrest, calling it a violation of the individual's constitutional rights. Read the entire Washington Post report here.
