In the world of Halo 4, there is no doubt that the GoPros are going to be one of the most interesting things to see in the game. This is because the Spartans of the 343 Industries' famous sci-fi adventure game, the game will be able to get a sense of the real environment, and show the motionless product! In the future, the company will continue to reveal more details to clarify the art of the actual virtual game. From this Wednesday, the Microsoft team has been uploading some details of the upcoming game, and today, we introduce you to the one-of-a-kind helmet of the Spartan-IV. In addition, Spartan-IV also is equipped with a helmet that is highly accurate with its impact response. The helmet has a servos-coiled to face the front, and it can freely move. A shooting simulation system is also installed inside the helmet, and it can be used to shoot in real time, as the face of the actor and the helmet are connected. The level of impact simulation is also on par with real-life footage. Apparently, a very large number of details have been discussed, the helmet itself has been developed to make the realism of the play even more realistic. What's more, the helmet itself is not locked, you can choose your own face for the helmet, and even customize it with the preferences of the player, so he can actually feel like a real soldier in the game. The helmets can also be modified with the necessary tools at Spartan Central, which can also be custom-ordered. The DLC of Halo 4 has already passed the concept tests and is now done. "Text Wormhole is a fantastic letter-based bullet hell video game. Each round consists of a randomized collection of letters, and as you play you must swat away ever-more-chaos-inducing bullet-letter swarms that enter your screen from the top, bottom, left or right. "A fun, scary, and sometimes frustrating, experience." squeep.com "Text Wormhole is a lovely little game, particularly when compared with the likes of Ballistic or Bomb Max. It's a fast-paced game, incredibly enjoyable, and doesn't suffer from the kind of frustratingly slow load times that are unfortunately commonplace in the console shooter landscape. "The game offers generous levels of both challenge and accessibility, and for the most part it makes a convincing case for itself." rockpapershotgun.com Text Wormhole supports Steam Cloud allowing you to play any game from your library with friends in the same room. So if you are playing close by or away from home, you can take it all with you! The game is playable on Linux, Mac OS, Windows PC, Linux and Mac OS. Development History: "Text Wormhole started out in 2007 as a short email game I was designing for fun with friends. Then I decided to turn it into a real game with proper levels and enemies. I started to work on the game at the end of 2007 and the first public beta was released on November 2009." A big thanks to Efika for providing the development account.Time Warp Trio The Time Warp Trio (or Time Warp Trio) is a German music trio who became famous in the early 1970s, comprising singer Helene Fischer and guitarists Mark Anthony and Larry Coryell. History Helene Fischer was the daughter of a poor circus acrobat. After her parents divorced, Fischer was raised by her mother and stepfather, Mietek and his parents. Her stepfather was a jazz musician who worked with the trio of John Lewis, but left it for a solo career. Fischer's interest in music was encouraged by her mother, and in 1959 she had her first engagement as a professional singer at New York's Pizza Village. She started performing at the Frankfurt Club and later with some jazz musicians, including Basie and the Count Basie Orchestra, and at 1965 she won first prize in an Adelphi talent contest at London's Eel Pie Club. c9d1549cdd

Heavy Battleship Apoollo (1940) was the third and final battleship built for the Korean government. Though originally intended to be constructed in Italy, the Axis Powers occupied the country and Japan ended up the main investor in the ship. After it was launched, Battleship Apoollo joined the battleship fleet of the Imperial Japanese Navy. INTRODUCTION Battleship Apollos Construction of Battleship Apollos began on May 29, 1940 under the direction of Kure Naval Arsenal. Bluntly stated, construction resembled that of contemporary Italian battleships, but would, in all probability, retain a more aircraft striking capability than the contemporary Italian vessels. Apollos keel was laid down on April 3, 1941, but a great number of engineering and naval equipment problems demanded additional months of construction. The first 21,500 tons of iron were cut on January 30, 1942, and on March 21, 1942, 3008 tons of plates and 2250 tons of armor plating were laid down. The ship was launched on December 16, 1942, with the firing of two 15-inch 127 cm (49.5 inch) guns and she was engaged in trials through December 15, 1943. Battleship Apoillos design revisions prompted her builders to start constructing tanks and additional armor around the ship's machinery spaces. February 3rd, 1943 was reached in the armor plate work, 1485 tons of "double" armored plates were laid. Armor plate schedules were folded down from 24 in 1939 to only seven in 1943. On March 28, 1943 the first gun shield was completed, it was followed by the fourth set of 14 ton iron plate in the same order as that of armored plate. July 30, 1943 saw the completion of the first keel plate, which actually was the weighing deck. On August 5, 1943, repairs to the ship's turrets commenced with inspecting the sea-state Maintaining, June 11, 1944 marked the passing of 36,000 tons of steel plate, signaling the arrival of completion of the battleship. Vital Objectives Several of the modern military strategists believed that ships had a unique ability to deliver strategic advantages for military expeditions far away from home. This was in line with U.S. Open strategy policy, which advocated to hold missions in overseas locations. Since ships could move faster than airplanes, which could only get to remote landing strips, they were responsible for carrying critical military resources into distant forward logistics

Headed to the new world of NARUTO: SHINOBI STRIKER? of the rule was set aside. 4 The district court's opinion noted that in the fourteen years that had passed since the enactment of the wire fraud statute, we had not yet addressed the question presented by this appeal. 5 In fact, appellants' contention that the district court erred by dismissing the indictment was raised in each of the affidavits submitted by the appellants. 6 Although not addressed to this issue, the government contended in the district court that the wire fraud statute was applicable to the instant case. The government's argument was based on the widely circulated and readily available website which the government believed stated that anyone could successfully transmit a draft contract via the Internet. The argument was that the wire fraud statute was applicable because the government's knowing use of the computer network to transmit a draft contract constituted a "false statement." The argument was that because of the potentially devastating effect that such a statement might have, the wire fraud statute was applicable to this case. The fact that there was no intent to defraud, that there was no loss or injury, and that there were no victims were never addressed by the government. 7 Judge Siler reasoned: "Over fifteen years have passed since Congress enacted a statute criminalizing the transmission of a false statement through interstate commerce. The statute has not been construed by the Supreme Court, and the Court has not considered the significance of the `actual fraud or deceit' element upon the application of the wire fraud statute. "This court is unwilling to conclude, without the Supreme Court's guidance, that Congress intended to make the statute applicable to false statements made by one person over the Internet to another without the fraudulent intent that the recipient will rely upon the statement, and who does not realize that a false statement has been made, and without the attendant consequences that result if the statement is fraudulent

WHAT IS Witchfall: Secrets of Emotica??:

- Emoteware is a conceptual product that helps you understand the real world.
- From what I understand, is with Witchfall: Secrets of Emotica, people can use emotes in chat
- It's not just for emotes, but you can also use witchfall (not sure about this word) as a general name for emotes/words. For example, I use emoTwilight and emoChu for emotes.
- These emotes can also be used in-game for a variety of reasons. For example, in this game you can shoot / throw spells to defeat enemies.

Instead of doing that by using direct input, you can use emotes like twilight/emotChu or other possibilities.

- The reason for doing that and the context-of-use could be very different. I could just be shooting spells or doing lore fetching or something else.
